The purpose of this paper is to present a new approach to the design of a user interface for a digital library system. The approach is based on the concept of a 'digital library user interface' (DLUI) which is a user interface that is designed to support the user's interaction with the digital library system.

The DLUI is designed to support the user's interaction with the digital library system in a way that is consistent with the user's expectations and needs. The DLUI is designed to be user-centred, meaning that it is designed to support the user's interaction with the digital library system in a way that is consistent with the user's expectations and needs.
